
Business

■ ONE hundred “leading” economists wrote to The Observer to say “it is now clear that Plan A isn’t working”, and call for Plan B. A smaller group of economists, including Roger Bootle at Capital Economics, Stephen Green at HSBC and Gerard Lyons at Standard Chartered, also penned a letter to the newspaper. The reason? Its decision to sideline respected economics commentator William Keegan – one of the few reasons left to read the paper.
